3. THE APPLICANT'S IMMIGRATION HISTORY:

An applicant's immigration history refers both to their visa and travel history. In considering the applicant's immigration history, You MUST consider the following factors:

Previous visa applications for Australia or other countries, including:

- a. If the applicant previously applied for an Australian temporary or permanent visa, whether those visa applications are yet to be finally determined (within the meaning of subsection 5(9) of the Act), were granted, or grounds on which they were refused.

- b. If the applicant has previously applied for visas to other countries, whether they were refused a visa and the circumstances that led to visa refusal.

Previous travels to Australia or other countries, including:

- a. If the applicant previously travelled to Australia, whether they complied with the conditions of their visa and left before their visa ceased, and if not, were there circumstances beyond their control.

- b. Whether the applicant previously held a visa that was cancelled or considered for cancellation, and the associated circumstances.

- c. The amount of time the applicant has spent in Australia and whether the Student visa may be used primarily for maintaining ongoing residence, including whether the applicant has undertaken a series of short, inexpensive courses, or has been onshore for some time without successfully completing a qualification.

- d. If the applicant has travelled to countries other than Australia, whether they complied with the immigration laws of that country and the circumstances around any non-compliance.

I hereby declare that the information provided above are true and correct to the best of my knowledge
